Dear Mr. Mulligan and GiveGab team,

I came across GiveGab while just beginning my web development studies and exploring my future career possibilities. I was drawn to GiveGab because of its alignment with my personal and professional aspirations to apply my skills to the betterment of the global community. I know that, given the opportunity, I would excel in the Front-End Development position alongside the GiveGab team.

After studying Global Studies at Alfred University with plans to work for an international non-profit, I realized that there were many problems much closer to home. With this in mind, I spent the greater part of my 20's in a business partnership with my brother building a successful organic farm and a local food movement in our NJ hometown. One winter, after becoming dissatisfied with the limits of a spreadsheet and the monotony of entering the data from the previous season, I decided to find a better way. My first attempt at building a custom point of sale system was unsuccessful, but it rekindled my interest in programming that started in high school with building games for the TI-83 graphing calculator. Deciding to part ways with the farm left me free to follow these desires by pursuing a degree in programing.

My experience managing employees, dealing with customers, and organizing the production of a wide variety of produce makes me uniquely suited to coordinating the many complexities involved in developing modern web applications. A life long passion for art and design has proved to be indispensable in improving my front-end aesthetics, and I look forward to using these skills to further GiveGab's cause.

If you have any questions, I can be reached at either my phone or email listed in the header. Thank you for considering me for the Front-End Developer position and I hope to hear from you soon.

Sincerely,

William Smith
